The American Art Association Disposes of Its Prize for 750,000 France, Thereby Making a Considerable Profit, While Retaining the Privilege of Exhibition

Mere for Six Weeks Longer. Millet's famous picture, "The Angelus," which was sold to the American Art Association of this city on July 1, 1889, at the auction of the Secretan collection in Paris, has been sold once more. The negotiations have only just been completed in Paris by Mr. R. Austin bertson, representing the American Art Association. It is not known yet exactly who the purchaser is, inasmuch as Mr. Robertson's neretiations have been carried on with agents. The picture has sold this time for 750,000 france as against 553,000 france, paid over a year ago by the American Art Association.

It is conjectured that "The Angelus," when returned to Paris will be placed by its purchaser in the Louvre, but nothing definite can be said about this until later. The picture will remain in this country until about the middle of December, the terms of the sale requiring that it shall be delivered in Paris on January 1. The papers of the sale have been signed and a deposit paid upon the purchase price. Possibly the identity of the buyer may be made known before the rest of the money is paid, but it is quite likely that he will not become known until the famous painting is handed over to his agents.

Millet finished "The Angelus" at Barbizon in 1859. He was then only a struggling artist, and when he asked 3,000 france for his work it was refused. The first purchaser of it got it 1,800 francs, of which Millet received only 500. Some time later it was sold for 5,000 francs to M. Jules Van Pract. a Belgian minister. Then, after passing through various hands, it went into the collection of Mr. John W. Wilson, who gave 38,000 france for it. In 1881 Paris had an art sensation when the Wilson gallery went into the collection of Mr. John W. Wilson, who gave 38,000 francs for it. In 1881 Paris had an art sensation when the Wilson gallery was sold. M. Secretan got "The Angelus" for 180,000 francs. It was the sem of his collection, and when having been rulned by speculation. Beerstan was compelled to part with his art treasures. "The Angelus" heceme the object of a sensational contest between various dealers and collectors and the French neoble, who was the looked of the collection occurred on July 1. 1892, and a tremendous crowd was present in the Guierie Schledingeyer when "The Annelus" was reached by the auctioneer. The blidding was started at 100,000 francs, but the experts in charge of the sale stated that no less than 800,000 francs would be received as an offer. Immediately the representative of the Corcoran Gallery in Washington bd 400,000 francs. The representative of the french Mujster of Fine Arts bid 450,000 francs. A. Montagine. representing the American Art Association of this city, increased the bid to 500,000 francs. Advances of 1,000 francs sak were then made until the auctioneer knocked it down to the representative of the French Minister of Fine Arts at 503,000 francs. A bid of 504,000 francs by Montaginee. Fine was so much clamor at this that his decision was recalled and "The Angelus" was put up again. The audience was greatly excited and the bidding was prolonged until it stood at 503,000 francs to the credit of the French Minister. The American bidders thought it ussless to continue the contest, and the masterplece was set down to the Louve at the final bid of the French Misister.

Because of political consitions, the French Minister, of the American art Association announced that they would take the pleture at the final bid of the French Misister.

Because of political consitions, the French Minister of the American Art Association sense of the pleture, and, as the French Minister could not make good his bid with money, the representatives of the American Art Association sense to the Fre continue the schibition of the picture in this country, and it is expected that the revenue it will bring between now and the time that it is shipped to Paris will make up for the concession that the association made to the French purchaser.

After "The Angelus" had been exhibited with the Earry collection here it was shown in Chicago for four weeks, then in Montreal for three weeks, and then in Bullato. From there it was taken to Boston, where it is at present. It has not yet been decided when it shall be brought back to this city, but it certainly will be placed upon exhibition here again, and perhaps in Philadelphia and Washington.

HE WAS AN ARTIST,

And When He Turned His Hand to Forgery

and Swindling He Succeeded. While in New York city looking for farm aborers several weeks ago. Joel B. Smith of Greenlawn, L. L. came across an apparently newly landed German, whom he employed and took back with him to Greenlawn. The German said his name was Paul Guisoher. He gained the confidence of not only Mr. Smith's household, but of the whole community. He painted Mr. Smith's house, and frescoed the ceiling like an artist. When Mr. Smith paid aim his wages on Saturday night he bade all of his nequaintances good-by, saying he was going back to his home in Germany.

Tuesday afternoon of this week he entered the store of O. S. Sammis & Co. Huntington, and bought a barrel of flour and a bed quilt, tendering in payment acheck for $45.75, drawn to the order of Paul Guisoher, on the Huntington Bank, and to which the name of Joel B. Smith was signe! The name Joel B. Smith, Greenlawn, L. L. hart been printed across the stubend of the check with a rubber hand stamp. The check was accepted, and Guisoher received about $35 in change. He next visited Hewlett Scudder's store and bought two stores, tondering a check of $45,5 drawn in the same manner, in payment, and received the balance in cash. From Scudder's he went to Simon Hirschfield's clothing store and bought a suit of clothes, and, presenting a check of $45,75, he received the balance in cash as before. When he purchased the flour, quilt, and stoves he ordered them sent to Mr. Smith's farm. He took the suit of clothes with him.

Scudder & Sammis s store was the last place he visited, as far as it is known. Here he jurchased a barrel of flour and thirty-five yards of ticking, and ordered it sent to Mr. Smith's place. He gave a check for $45 in payment and received the balance in cash.

When the merchants presented their checks until the victimized merchants drove over and informed him of it the next day. The signature on the heeks was a lamost Identical with that of Mr. Smith had no account there. Mr. Smith had no account there. Mr. Smith had no account there with that of Mr. Smiths. The ofher writing on the checks was in a German hand. Mr. Emith says he never owned a stamp. Before ment on the lack was in a German hand. Mr. Emith says he never owned a stamp. Before heaving the farm on Saturday night Guischer between was in a German hand. Mr. Emithe son. usehold, but of the whole community. He painted Mr. Smith's house, and frescoed the Adam Schnaufer, a German mason and builder, of 269 South Sixth street. The corpse was discovered by his five-year-old boy whom he bad kissed by his five-year-old boy whom he had kissed and bidden good-by a half an hour before. Schnaufer was about 45 years old and had five children. His youngest child died of diphtheris on Monday, and on Thursday he drank yery hard. He went to bed at 11 o'clock on Thursday night, and on awaking yesterday he was very tacitum. He sent his wift to Irvington to see some relatives, and his children, with the exception of the five-year-old boy, went to school. He was a sub-marractor on several big buildings in Newark and Brook-iva, and it is said that he had lost money recently a noome of his work. This and the loss of his child made him despondent.

"Hermetic Philosophy," by "An Acolyte of the H. B. of L." (J. B. Lippincott Company). is a flattering tribute to Hermes Trismegistus. It is swelling and sonorous, and no fair judge can bring against it the charge that it betrays the secrets of Oriental occultism in the slightest degree. It is alert and completely efficacious against human comprehension. It is a fine nut for the hopeful, the patient, and the otherwise unoccupied. It is a millstone without a

We quote a single sentence from "A Brief History of the Empire State," by Welland Hendrick (C. W. Bardeen, Syracuse). "Amid uncontrollable applause Hamilton was borne from the room, given a banquet and placed non." The book does not say so, but we think we may safely add that the circumstance was colculated to make Mr. Hamilton's head swim. The style of histories should not be too laconic, for fear they should be mistaken for comic almanacs.

"Experimental Science," by George M. Hopkins (Munn & Co.), is an account and explanstion of the simpler phenomena of physics. It encourages the study of physics through experiments, and describes a great number of experiments which anybody may try. The book is admirably conceived, and clearly and cleverly constructed. It is illustrated by nearly 700 engravings. Photography, electric lighting, microscopy, and the telescope are among the popular subjects considered. A useful and interesting book.

Mrs. Victoria Woodhull that was (Mrs. John Biddulph Martin that is) and Miss Tennessee C. Ciasiin that was (Lady Cook that is) have published a sort of diary of their curious doings in a book entitled "The Human Body the Temple of God." The volume includes the Constitution of the United States, lectures, newspaper notices, and a number of pictures which are spirited, but not beautiful. There is a dash in its general aspect which reminds the beholder of one of Mr. Barnum's posters, and it and the poster seem to be identical in their reason of being.

In "The Two Lost Centuries of Britain." Mr. William H. Babcock seeks for a clearer picture tory. (J. B. Lippincott Company.) He makes frequently very skilful pictures, and very charming ones from a literary point of view: he affords also a great mass of pertinent information: but when all is done the two centuries are still left with a great deal of vagueness hanging about them. Hengist and Vortigern and the beguiling Rowens are still not bag pudding must yet remain the most human glimpse we have of the great Arthur. But these facts are clearly the fault of circumstances, and not of Mr. Babcock. He has done very well in his search for the lost centuries. As the children say in the game, he has been

We find poems of melody and ideality, of shrewdness and energy, of fancy and philosophy in "Songs from an Attic" (Brentano's). There are here pieces of very high merit and others not to be so highly praised. There are poems of nature and life, of heroism and emotion, poems on people and events, poems graceful and graphic, sombre and festive. Mr. McCann is a young New Yorker who possesses an aspiring spirit and is skilled in the art of world at large, admires his friends, and gives but slight heed to adversaries. In scanning the pages of this dainty volume, we notice that it has some curious features which display the nature of Mr. McCann's mind and life and experiences. For example, be extels sundry personages who possess traits of character that "differentiate them from each other" in several ways. We find here a poetical eulogy of Jay Gould and another of John Swinten; we find pieces upon Frederick Barnard and Maurice Barrymore, upon Robert G. Ingersoil and Brother Baptistar, upon Nugent Robinson and Horace Vinton, upon Lewis Rosenthal, Frederick Bryton, Jenny O'Brien, Mary Lang, Lester Wallack, Stephen C. Foster, Francis S. Saltus, Henry E. Dixey, H. P. Benjamin, Otis Skinner, C. L. B. Crommelin, Sidney Fordham, Thomas Bailey Aldrich, Robert Hilliard. John Boyle O'Reilly, and others, not a few of whom are well known in New York. All of the pieces show that the author has a wide acquaintance. a liberal mind, and a knack of writing pleasant canticles. After examining the more serious work of the author, we feel able to say that there is genuine merit in this book of John Ernest McCann.

A book of great beauty and of rare and curious interest for persons of training and in-stincts nautical is to be found in "Old Bea Wings, Ways, and Words in the Days of Oak and Hemp." by Robert C. Leslie (Scribner & Welford). The cuts alone are a treasure. illustrating as they do about all the sorts of marine constructions that have been propelled by sails. There are 135 of these pic-tures, the work of the author, and very beautifully and delicately executed. In a book of this sort, though it be wrttten by an English man under the great inspiration of English nautical achievement, there must be an honorable place, of course, for the Yankee shipbuilder, of whom Clark Russell gracefully says that he certainly holds a trick high against his British brother. There is some little criticism of American yachts which will seem a trifle perverse to American readers, but it is hardly calculated to provoke hard feelings, and there is plenty that is flattering concerning the speed and beauty of divers sorts of American craft. The Yankee skipper, too, awakens considerable admiration in the author, but with the British pilot he thinks there is none to compare. Of the pilots hereabouts he says-it must have been in the fine old Black X-line packet days-" I have known a Yankee pilot board a ship two or three hundred miles off

Sandy Hook in striped korseymere pants"-we grieve that Mr. Leelle should say pants-"a black swallow-tailed dress coat. French patent-leather boots, and an old Panama hat, and the moment he got on the quarter deck seat himself on a camp stool, light a cigar, and commence chatting to the skipper as though he bad nothing else to do on board." Besides its com-prehensive general descriptions, the book contains an alphabetically arranged list of sea terms, with explanations of the same. In this age "The Love Letters of a Portuguese Nun" seem a trifle measured and fo mal. Undoubtedly the fair author suffered by the desertion of her fine French lover, and nobody that we have ever heard of has intimated that she wrote merely for literary effect. Still, the polgnancy of her grief did not prevent her from writing very carefully and very well, and we do believe that she found some relief in the composition of her letters, just as hundreds of lovers in all ages have found a measure of solace for the pangs of despised affection in the hard labor of putting the joints of a connet together. For those who are not familiar with them, a full understanding of the state of mind and the epistolary art of Marianna Alcaforado and of the perfidy of the Marquis of Chamilly. her lover, may be obtained in a handsome new English translation of the "Love Letters" (Cassell Publishing Company). It is some 220 years now since the Marquis of Chamilly-he was only the Count of St. Leger at the time. and only twenty-five years old-went sailing off to Portugal as a Captain of King Louis's auxiliaries, to fight with the Portuguese in a war against Spain, and shortly went sailing home again wearing the poor nun's heart upon his sleeve. The "Love Letters" are pretty old. as time is reckoned, but the sentimentality that is in them preserves their bloom, and it is possible that they will never die. It is not quite sure. It should perhaps be said, that the Marquis of Chamilly ever did jilt a nun in Portugal, and it is not quite sure that a nun really did write the "Love Letters." or that Marianna Alcaforado was the nun who was alleged to be jilted and who was believed to have written them. The historical part o the story is somewhat shadows, but it may be true, and certainly anybody would be foolish not to believe it, if by believing he could derive from the perusal of the letters any addi-Foreigners, and natives, too, perhaps, will find something amusing in the title of a new spelling book issued by the American Book Company. "The Natural Speller." it is called. The adjective in the title is the amusing point. The book is conservative, and to describe the conservative spelling of English words as natural, no matter what assistance may be rendered through careful grouping and syllabification and the employment of two colors in ink, is to bid for the sentiment of mirth on the part of the English-studying millions who have floundered and suffered in the depths of our mysterious orthography. But humor brightens the world, and this is a helpful and good-looking spelling book. We notice, however, one instance of inaccurate instruction. In a little set of rules for the employment of capital letters it is said that capitals should begin the "names of persons and places." Now, a woodshed is a place, and so is the moon; but with the exception of Carlyle and a few others we are different from the Germans. and we do not dignify either of these words with a capital unless it chances to begin a sentence. As for the general plan of providing rules for very young persons in the matter of punctuation, capitalization, and so on, we suppose that they are hard to memorize and still harder to apply, and that a much better understanding of such things is to be obtained by observation in reading and practice in writing. The awful rules of the Latin grammar which used to be comprehensively and patly contained in the memory of youths of 19 and 20-we believe they are not now so necessary as they once were-had a great habit of fading and vanishing utterly at 25 or 30; and we suspect it is the lot of other scholarly rules to be forgotten in the same way. The reason is not ab solutely to be known. Possibly the mind does not care to put up indefinitely with a companionship so marrowless, so oppressively and insufferably dry.

"You have commenced your story where a great gap occurred in my own narrative, a gap which you alone could fill up. You have told your story with so much modesty, and such absolute truthfulness and loyalty to myself, that I cannot but feel pleased and grateful to you. There is within the covers of your volume much matter that is quite new to me, much that is extremely thrilling and exciting, and the whole is related with very enviable literary that and skill. With all my heart I commend to American and English readers this true tale of work manfully and nobly done and so modestly told."

PORT TARASCON:

The Last Adventures of the Illustrious Tartaris

By ALPHONSE DAUDET. Translated by HENRY JAMES. Richly Illustrated by Rossi, Myrbach, Montegut, Birlan, and MONTENARD. Svo, Cloth, Ornamental, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $2 50. .

The book is the result of a remarkable combination of talent and skill, being written by one of the greatest of French novellats, translated by one of the greatest of American authors, illustrated by distinguished French artists, who have created an original style in the art of illustration, and published with the accessories of handsome type and dainty binding, in which the American bookmaker excels. The admirers of Daudet's peculiar humor will find in this "largely, hugely laughable" story of the last adventures of Tartarin no abatement of the French novelist's power. And all who are attracted by the higher forms of modern fiction will be pleased with the artistic management of the tale, its alternations of comedy and tragedy, and its varying succession of interesting and amusing situations. "Its only defect," says Henry James, "is that it leaves no more to come? it exhausts the possibilities."

A Book for Boys, Young and Old.

Described for " Harper's Young People"

By W. D. HOWELLS. ILLUSTRATED. Post Svo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.95.

A really remarkable study of a boy's life, character, and attitude toward his surroundings. To represent with any approach to faithfulness what passes in a child's mind is given to few mature men. A Boy's Town is indeed thoroughly interesting from beginning to end; and it will be enjoyed most by the boys who, as they think (though not always correctly), put off their boybood so long ago that they may seem to have forgotten all about it until Mr. Howells comes along with his reminiscent power and his graphic pen, and convinces them that they have not passed beyond the experience of a lively interest in those bygone days.—N.
